

Bullying awareness

Several workshops and programs will be held throughout the city this week as officials launched National Bullying AwarenessWeek yesterday. Mayor David Miller, along with members of the Toronto Coalition for the Awareness and Prevention of Bullying, kicked off the campaign at Nathan Phillips Square, speaking about the prevalence of bullying at school as well as online. Organizers said the campaign is to teach families how to recognize the signs of bullying and how to prevent it.